2:00-3:00 p.m. | Willard 010

“If the Answer is Community Engagement:
What is the Question?”

Community engagement--what, why, and to what end? Increasingly universities must address today's local and global complex issues by engaging with key stakeholders outside the academy. This engagement often takes the form of mutually beneficial partnerships that produce and apply knowledge. For academic scholars, students, and staff involved, this means applying expertise to real-world problems and collaborating with peers in other sectors who also bring their knowledge and wisdom to the table—a practice known as community-engaged scholarship. Through this session, you will know about community engagement as a strategy for you to be an effective engaged scholar tackling today's “wicked” problems.

Please also plan to attend a reception immediately following the lecture in the Anderson Family Living Room. Guests will have the opportunity to interact with Dr. Sandmann and learn more about community engagement within the College of Education.
